ON AN INNOCENT DAY IN 1899—While her father travels abroad, twelve-year-old Maggie Delito unwittingly witnesses a shocking scandal.

The next day, she's dragged from her family's estate and locked in an asylum, along with the shameful secret. Beneath the noted asylum's polish of respectability, a wicked villainy hides in dank shadows, and Maggie fears she will be its next victim.

SEVENTY-FIVE YEARS LATER—Laura Delito inherits more than ancestral assets when her prestigious family's mysterious past comes knocking. After sacrificing an independent career on the brink of success, she assumes control of Delito's failing jewelry business while daring to expose its ghosts. As she pursues clues from the Northeast to North Africa, she fails to see danger looming close to home.

*"Shameful family secrets. A heroine I can't forget.
A masterfully written story that kept me reading long into the night.
Asylum checks all the boxes for a modern Gothic must-read."*

— Sadie Hartwell, author, Tangled Web Mysteries

~ A Book Club Favorite ~

Set in periods of transition with the rise and fall of manufacturing, changing mores and folkways, and struggles for equal rights, Asylum prompts discussion of social and economic issues that remain relevant today.

"Intrigue, emotion, and adventure! A must-read for any book club!"

— C. DePalma, Ladies' Book Club

"Even as I was doing other things, my mind kept going back to the characters."

— L. Colk, Southington Book Club

Award winning author Kathryn Orzech is an avid world traveler writing mystery, suspense, and thrillers set in "New England and other exotic locations," with female protagonists who flirt with romance, brush with the supernatural, and fearlessly confront extraordinary situations. A devout film fan and self-proclaimed news nerd, her interests include history and geopolitics, society and culture, science, psychology, and parapsychology, leaving few subjects off her literary table.
